Taxter corrobo-rated his testimony and added that when they investigated they found that Peters was dead. They did not touch the body, he said, as they feared they might leave inger prints and be accused as the murderers. Taxter declared that a photograph of the body, entered as an exhibit, did not show the position as they saw it. The photograph shows that the feet of the dead man were toward the road, while Taxter declared emphatically that when they discovered the holy the head was toward the road.
